Frequently Asked Questions

Does James Strock serve as a spokesperson? Yes, where the product, enterprise or idea advanced is consistent with his values.

Does James Strock serve as an emcee, or undertake other non-keynote speaking opportunities? Yes. We can also work with you to combine various speaking roles in the course of an organizational conference, for example. Our goal is always to serve effectively.

Do you license teaching programs and certify individuals to teach the Serve to Lead® System? Yes. Please send e-mail to: permissions at servetolead.org.

How can one obtain permissions for use of James Strock's books, articles, speeches and other products? Please send e-mail to: permissions at servetolead.org.

Do you offer individual and group coaching? Yes. We offer this as a follow-up to speeches and seminars or, as a stand-alone service.

Is James Strock & Co. a registered U.S. government contractor? Yes.

Does James Strock & Co. engage in lobbying? No. Nonetheless, we can add value assisting in developing and implementing strategies including government entities as stakeholders. James Strock also often serves as an expert before government agencies and other authoritative bodies, including public testimony before congressional hearings.

Does James Strock & Co. work with non-U.S. clients? Yes, so long as their interests and goals are entirely consistent with those of the United States.

What kinds of alternative dispute resolution services do you offer? James Strock, working independently or with others, serves as a mediator, convenor and facilitator.

Is your work as a neutral—mediator, convenor and facilitator—inconsistent with your work as an advocate? No. The roles are entirely separate. So long as the distinction is clear, the experience as an advocate can be immensely valuable in serving effectively as a neutral, eliciting a creative result amid the conflict of advocates in a given case or controversy.

Is James Strock available as an expert witness? Yes, when the underlying case position is consistent with our values.
